FUNCTION OF THE BAROGRAPH.

Correction of a Statement Regarding Aviation Instrument.

To the Editor of The Star:

I noticed in a recent issue of The Star an article on aerial instruments. In the interest of the science of flying I cannot let this pass without comment, as there is so much said which is not right and which to the amateur mind would be very misleading.

In speaking of the record of the barograph you make note of the fact that it indicates "the speed at which he is traveling." This is not so. The instrument used for this purpose is a speed indicator, usually of liquid type, the working member being a column of spirit which rises in a glass tube during the flight.

Again, you speak of rises and falls of 10 degrees or 20 degrees being noted on the barograph by the aviator. This is personally very much in doubt, as the thickness of the pen record is invariably equal to this distance of the chart, and the thickness of the machine would not allow such small amounts to be accurately noted on the record.

Again, the barograph cannot advise anybody of the changes in air currents, only as regards their pressure, which is indicated only by rising and falling in the air.

The aviators of Europe have been using barographs for the determination of height for more than six years. I had one in my possession on England's regular indicator, which was used in the invention of barographs for aerial use and are still used on a great many machines; in fact, the United States navy has an equipment in use in which indicating barometers are still prominent.

Your correspondent could not have been very well informed on the markets of this instrument, as you say that a French and a German are the only two makes of barographs. A concern in England probably makes the more of these instruments than any of the other makers in the world put together. This concern (whose name need not be mentioned) has its supplies in use by the United States navy, and many of the makers of machines in these instruments installed in their product.

Barographs have been used for the last forty years or more in the registration of changes in atmospheric pressure, and are used in all weather bureaus throughout the country. They are practically the same as those used in aviation, except that the latter have to be manufactured to take care and register a great deal lighter column of air, as naturally the higher we go the less the pressure becomes.

Women's Suits in the New Spring Styles, Designs and Materials Greater in Variety Than Any Previous Season.

Suits for every occasion and every woman—on every side we see suits that are actually different—not merely varied. This season there seems to have been a suspension of the rigid laws governing suit fashions of a clearly defined character. Every Suit is wearable, becoming and beautiful.

Silk Faille Suits, Dressy Suits, Semi-Dress Suits, Tailleur Suits, Afternoon Suits, Mourning Suits, Sports Suits, Tailored Suits, Semi-tailored Suits, Cross-Country Suits, Meadowbrook Suits, Prince Chap Suits

With all the smart style touches of the season in buttons, braids and self-made ornaments. The variedness in skirts is marked, so that a suit may have a skirt of great width, medium flare or circular; some have yokes, plaits at sides or back, small or large.

Pockets are essential to coats and skirts; patch pockets, set-in pockets, braid-trimmed pockets, button-trimmed pockets, flap pockets.

Of especial interest are the belts. Made of both the bright and the suede leathers and self materials; some finished with pockets or buttons, or both; a clever combination belt is in blue and white, with silver buttons. Never were buttons so freely used; self-covered; plain and fancy; bones in flat and bullet shapes. Buttons extending from neck of coat to the hem of skirt; others in clusters on skirts, some attractively used on the new flare cuffs.

THE MATERIALS—Mostly ribbed and of that "new-old-fashioned" type, such as silk failles, silk poplins, imported gabardine, wool poplin, men's wear serge, shepherd checks, English tweeds, Scotch homespun and novelty cloths.

SHADES—Give the neutral tones the preference, such as Holland blue, Belgian blue, Newport sand, battleship gray, Tuxedo brown, navy, putty, green, wistaria, black-and-white and a good representation of fancies.

There is so much to be seen in the new styles that the only way one can become properly acquainted as to the variedness and beauty is to inspect them.

The Season's New Silk Dresses For Evening, Afternoon and Street Wear.

The most desired shades this spring seem to be rose, Belgian blue, sand, putty, pearl gray and the shades which are always good, navy, Copenhagen and black.

And our showing of the new styles embraces all of these colors and many others in the most beautiful modes which it has been possible to obtain. There are lovely afternoon gowns of taffeta, crepe de chine, pussy willow silks or other soft silks.

Evening gowns are equally large in variety. Among the many exquisite models are those with high waist line effects; bodices of lace with almost no sleeve at all, dainty skirts, with pointed tunics or full flare, and numerous others individual and exclusive in style.

Street frocks are simpler in fashion. They show the new modes in lovely effects, and most of them have long sleeves and either high or ve necks.

Prices range from $25.00 to $75.00 each.

Especially attractive is the extensive assortment of Dresses at $25.00 each. We have made great efforts to obtain very complete styles and color selections in dresses at this price, and the variedness of the showing makes it unusually interesting.
